

Bill Maher's audience falls quiet as he addresses the realities of today's liberals:

“They say in politics, liberals are the gas pedal and conservatives are the brakes. And I'm generally with the gas pedal, but not if we're driving off a cliff.

Sweden opened its borders to over a million and a half immigrants since 2010, and now 20% of its citizens are foreign born and its education system is tanking, and it has Europe's highest rate of gang land killings, to which liberals say blaming immigrants for the rising crime rate is racist. Yeah, but is it true? Of course it's true.

It's not a coincidence the quality of life went down after the Somali gangs started a drug turf war using hand grenades. Calling it racist doesn't solve the problem.

Yes, you can move too far left. And when you do, you wind up pushing the people in the middle to the right.

At its worst, Canada is what American voters think happens when there's no one putting a check on extreme wokeness.”
