

Projection as Ideology, Liberals are now a Cult.

What you are seeing inside the modern liberal mind is not independent thought. It is projection stacked on top of projection until it becomes a worldview. Everything they accuse others of is exactly what they are doing themselves.

Fascism, hatred, authoritarianism, extremism.

None of these labels originate from observation. They originate from internal guilt and ideological insecurity.

Liberals no longer argue ideas. They chant labels.

They move as a mob, not as individuals.

Once a belief becomes emotionally fused to identity, reason becomes irrelevant. At that point, disagreement is treated as evil rather than difference. This is how cult psychology forms. The individual dissolves into the group, and the group demands constant reinforcement through outrage and moral panic.

Projection is the fuel.

By calling everyone else Nazis, they avoid confronting their own authoritarian instincts. By labeling dissent as dangerous, they justify silencing it. By declaring themselves morally superior, they excuse any behavior that would otherwise be indefensible. This is not intelligence. It is narcissism reinforced by group approval.

History is full of movements like this. Jim Jones did not start with poison. He started with moral certainty. He convinced his followers that everyone outside the group was evil, corrupted, and dangerous. Once that belief was locked in, the group no longer needed evidence or restraint. The same psychological mechanics are visible now, amplified by social media and political rhetoric.

A society cannot function when one side abandons reason and replaces it with projection and fanaticism.

When people stop thinking and start chanting, they do not become righteous. They become dangerous.
